

Université de Haute-Alsace – Mulhouse
Department of Applied Languages

<http://www.flsh.uha.fr/formations/langues-etrangeres-appliquees>

Presentation

The Department of Applied Languages is fully dedicated to teaching two complementary skills : applied languages (English together with German or Spanish or Italian) and scientific, technical or professional subjects. Students can prepare a B.A. in Economics and Cross-cultural studies followed by a Master's degree in Cross-cultural Management and International Affairs (MIC-AI), or a B.A. in Technical and Scientific Translation followed by a Master's degree in the same discipline (TST).

Our graduates are eagerly recruited by a variety of companies since they are highly proficient in at least two foreign languages and, at the same time, qualified in either technical and scientific fields (such as chemistry, physics, technology and so on) or in professional fields such as economics, marketing, management, etc. In addition, they are of course familiar with applied computer sciences.

Our students prove to be highly qualified to work in business and industry and are immediately operational because the Department is working hand in hand with employers, besides involving a large number of professionals as teaching staff. This is why our training programmes constantly keep up with the requirements of internationally-oriented business and industry.

Every day our Department strives for high quality and up-to-date programmes. By developing exchanges with foreign universities and companies alike, and intensifying the exchange of knowledge and practice, we are training our students for all the challenges of the world economy.

For more info:

<http://www.flsh.uha.fr/formations/lea>